Continued Leadership

Many people express wonder at the fact that the Rebbe's leadership is spoken of in the present tense, that the Rebbe's chasidim and admirers refer to the Rebbe's leadership as being uninterrupted.

Jewish teachings state that G-d showed the first person Adam, all future generations together with their great leaders. These leaders are the tzadikim (righteous individuals) whose souls were sent into this world to guide the generations, caring for them both spiritually and materially and showing the Jewish people the path to follow. Chasidic philosophy explains that these great leaders are the mind and the heart of the body of the Jewish people.

Each generation has its own unique mission and role in the overall fulfillment of G-d's purpose in the entire creation: to create a "home" for G-d in this physical world through the revelation of Moshiach and the Redemption.

In Tanya, Rabbi Shneur Zalman (founder of Chabad Chasidut) explains that earlier generations are like the head, their major preoccupation being Torah study; later generations, known as the "heels of Moshiach," are more closely associated with raw action. Within generations we also see these subdivisions with the tzadikim, and especially the leader of the generation, comprising the head and providing direction to the people as to how to fulfill their unique role.

G-d sends each generation the leader appropriate to the task of the times. The generation's leader comes to guide his generation in a unique direction in the fulfillment of G-d's purpose for creation commensurate with their own nature and purpose.

Let's apply these principles to our own generation. In the first official Chasidic teaching articulated by the Rebbe when he accepted the mantle of leadership, the Rebbe declared that the unique purpose of our generation, the seventh from Rabbi Shneur Zalman, is to fulfill the original intent of G-d's creation. This will be achieved by drawing down G-d's presence into our world with the complete revelation of Moshiach and the commencement of the Redemption.

The Rebbe told us numerous times that we have finished the Divine service of exile and that our purpose now is to prepare for the Redemption. "The time of your Redemption has arrived," the Rebbe declared. This is a totally different message that has never before been enunciated in the history of the Jewish people. The Rebbe explained that we should involve ourselves in more good deeds, more Torah study, the enhanced fulfillment of mitzvot, as a preparation and foretaste of the Redemption.

However, until the Redemption actually begins, with the rebuilding of the Third Holy Temple in Jerusalem and the ingathering of all of the Jews from the diaspora, the ultimate fulfillment of our purpose has not been achieved and we remain in the seventh generation with the Rebbe at our head.

Why the Rebbe's leadership is currently in this form will most likely remain a mystery until the complete revelation of Moshiach. But we do know what the Rebbe told us in no uncertain terms: that the role of our generation is to actually bring about the Redemption and to prepare ourselves and the entire world for it. Until this has been achieved, we remain in the same generation.

What Sparked the Great Change in Your Life?

"I was so jealous that I wasn't made the prince of the Kohat (Priestly) family." Korach, who as an elder person and until then righteous, led a rebellion against Moshe. (He and his 250 followers were miraculously killed.) Before you make a big move, (and small ones too) make sure it's good!!
